RE: [account # redacted]

Dear Ms Johnson:

I received your letter along with the tax returns.

After much investigating and questioning, I have learned that according to the IRS and the legal system, past taxes can only be pursued for three years or six from present date. So that would apply only to the years 2002, 2003, and 2004.

At this point in time, given the fact that I retired last year and the spiraling economy, like everybody else, I am struggling to get through this possible recession. I am very hopeful that in the coming year, with the promised increase in social security, that I will be able to begin making payments.

Thank you very much for your patience.

Sincerely,
